

Zachary Lum

Professor Khatibi

Art 75

10 February 2020

Reading Response #2

After researching various modern video artists on the internet, the three artists that I picked out that caught my attention with their work were Christian Marclay, Hannah Black, and Andrew Thomas Huang. Christian Marclay is well known for his piece called “The Clock”, which was made and presented to the public in 2010. I have actually seen this piece in my Art 74 class when learning about Digital Video Art and I thought this was very cool and original. I was mesmerized by how much work and research Marclay put into this project and to tell time through video art. Hannah Black created a piece in 2014 called “My Bodies” and it basically was a mash-up of various female singers singing My Body. I thought this was cool because along with recognizing some of the songs that were being played it keeps the viewers immersed by trying to figure out the relationship with the audio and pictures. Andrew Thomas Huang was a video artist that broke barriers in the art industry. His video the Doll Face was nominated for Best of Youtube in 2007. It was so interesting to see how the video turned out and it made me think too about how he created the whole video.