Essay

My idea comes out of the paper airplane toward the meaning of the missing parents. The main character is the paper plane which flies to parents from me. And the airplane fold by the letter which I want to say to my family. However, today people don't kind of using that traditional medium to deliver the info to others. So the turning point will be the airplane could not arrive on my family and fall down somewhere, but soon I take out my phone to message them at the moment. It seems that a humorous way that the comparison between the old tradition and the new era.

The beginning view will be the view of the outside window, and then generally close to me stared thoughtfully into the distance which my inner monologue is telling I am missing my family and also it also implies that I was not with my parents. The second view that I take out the paper and decided to write something to my parents in the letter. Then I fold it into the shape of an airplane. When I pick up the plane and throw it out the window, I imagine the experience of this paper plane, stepping across mountains and oceans, from the United States to China, to where my parents lived. However, returning the fact, the plane just crashes straight down from the window, I sighed, picking up the phone from the pocket and typing a few words of greetings to my parents. And the end.

On the timeline, I want to use it for about 3 minutes to 4 minutes. The main time period is to look at the process of imagining the aircraft in my mind and give a special portrait of the aircraft. There should be a total of 6 scenes, but it can be detailed.
